This house was built by Mossey Campbell, a Kentucky planter. The house was built entirely with slave labor under his supervision. At that time he was the owner of over one hundred slaves; all mill work was done in Indianola and brought to the site by ox cart. Mrs. Wallace has in her possession a walnut cupboard, which was made on the place by a slave cabinet maker. The house is a distinct Colonial plantation type of native limestone with plastered interior and stuccoed exterior; this two and one half story structure has twelve rooms; the roof is pitched and covered with cypress shingles; a two story porch runs around three sides; the woodwork is cypress, oak and walnut.

This information was secured from Mrs. Henry Campbell Wallace of Seguin, Texas, who is the present owner.
